Information Sharing Environment

What is an ISE and how does it matter?

- A set of services linked together that foster information exchange
- A method to identify users from multiple agencies and grant them access to selected information
- Common standards allowing information to be exchanged and interpreted by connected computer systems
- A way to test and certify software to ensure it meets the standards

An ISE is comprised of:

- Organizations, people, and cultures
- Authorities
- Policies, procedures, and practices
- Information technology systems
- Information
- Architecture, standards and information exchange tools

What is the direct value of an ISE?

- Delivers information to the person who needs it at the time a decision must be made
- Eliminates duplicate data entry across systems
- Reduces errors and mistakes in handling people and cases, reducing risk and potential liability
- Safeguards sensitive information
- Increases overall productivity
- Exemplifies best practices in the use of IT
